06/29	Applying for veterans' disability and medical benefits can be a complicated and lengthy process, especially if you have been denied by your local veterans' hospital or veterans' office. Fortunately, an extensive appeal process has been established for those who have filed a claim with the Veterans Administration and have received an unfavorable determination. However, time is of the essence. Unless you can introduce new evidence or the VA has made an unmistakable error, you only have one year from when the local VA office mails you an initial determination of your claim. While you do not need an attorney or representative to assist you in appealing your claim, it is essential to have someone on your side due to the appeals process's technical, procedural, and legal nature.
